

San Antonio International Airport Construction Update

Terminal Construction Takes Off

PROJECT SUMMARY: By the mid part of 2006, airport patrons will be noticing some dramatic differences at San Antonio International Airport. One of the projects that will be garnering much of the attention is the construction of two new terminal facilities, Terminals B & C. Terminal B will be constructed first and will be located between existing Terminals One & Two. The new facility will have approximately 204,000 square-feet and will feature seven gates. Once "B" is operational, Terminal Two will be demolished. This will clear enough room for a second new terminal, Terminal C. That facility will cover approximately 176,000 square-feet and will open with a total of five gates. However, it will be capable of accommodating eleven gates. Terminal B is scheduled for construction starting in mid-2006 with a completion date of late 2008. Work on Terminal C will likely begin in 2009, with a complete date set in late-2010. Once both new facilities are operational, Terminal One will then become known as "Terminal A," giving San Antonio International Airport a complete lettering system of Terminals A, B & C. Additional aircraft apron space will also be necessary in support of these new facilities.

IMPACT AND TIPS:

- * Area between Terminals 1 & 2 currently used for car-rental shuttle buses will be closed effective Jan. 9. That pick-up area will be moved to new location.
- * Limousines, couriers, hotel shuttles, charters & courtesy vans will all be relocated.
- * See map on page 2 for details on relocation of services.
